

Another alliance is discussed

As the need for even greater economies of scale within the global auto industry became ever more apparent, Renault and Nissan began exploratory talks with General Motors in July 2006 regarding the possibility of creating an industrial alliance. The talks were ended in October of that year without any agreement.